I believe your misunderstanding regarding myservice.com/are/these/credentials/valid returning 401 when you only make a check is due to the fact that boolean requests in REST are frequently incorrect due to RESTful restrictions. Every request should result in the return of a resource. In a RESTful service, asking boolean queries is a steep slope down to RPC. Now I'm not sure how the services you looked at are acting. However, having something like an Account object that you try to GET is a nice approach to solve this. You will get the Account object if your credentials are correct; if you don't want to waste bandwidth only to "check," you may conduct a HEAD on the same resource. We have the best 7 strategy games here and the MLBB Tier List for free!
